

IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

STATE OF WASHINGTON; STATE OF ARIZONA;
STATE OF ILLINOIS; STATE OF OREGON; DELMY FRANCO ALEMAN; CHERLY NORALES CASTILLO; ALICIA CHAVARRIA LOPEZ,
Plaintiffs-Appellees,

v.

DONALD J. TRUMP; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY;
SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION; MICHELLE KING, Acting Commissioner of Social Security, in her official capacity as Acting Commissioner of the United States Social Security Administration;
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF STATE; MARCO RUBIO, in his official capacity as United States
Secretary of State; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES; DOROTHY FINK, in her official capacity as Acting Secretary of United States Department of Health and Human Services; DOJ - UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE; PAMELA BONDI, Attorney General; UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE;
GARY WASHINGTON, Acting Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; KRISTI NOEM, in her official capacity as Secretary of Homeland Security; JEFF WU, Acting Administrator, Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services; CENTERS FOR MEDICARE AND MEDICAID SERVICES,
Defendants-Appellants.

On Appeal from the United States District Court for the Western District of Washington (Seattle), Case No. 2:25-cv-00127-JCC • The Honorable John C. Coughenour, District Judge

BRIEF OF 208 MEMBERS OF CONGRESS AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF AFFIRMANCE OF THE DISTRICT COURT'S PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

DOUGLAS JENSEN*
MICHAEL BASS*
SHER TREMONTE LLP
90 Broad Street, 23rd Floor
New York, NY 10004
Telephone: (212) 202-2600
djensen@shertremonte.com
mbass@shertremonte.com

Motion for Ninth Circuit admission pending*

JONATHAN WEINBERG
Distinguished Professor of Law
WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY
471 West Palmer Avenue
Detroit, MI 48202
weinberg@wayne.edu

LINUS CHAN*
Clinical Professor of Law
UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA
229 19th Avenue South
Minneapolis, MN 55455
Telephone: (612) 301-1156
rlchan@umn.edu

Counsel for Amici Curiae 208 Members of Congress

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES	iii
INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE.....	1
INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT	2
ARGUMENT	3
I. The INA requires affirmance of the preliminary injunction.	3
II. Congress, in mandating citizenship for all persons “born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof,” legislated a robust version of jus soli	5
A. Background	5
B. In Section 201(a) of the Nationality Act of 1940, reenacted in the INA, Congress continued to embrace a robust version of jus soli	8
1. The Revision and Codification explicitly endorsed jus soli	10
2. The legislative hearings make plain Congress’s plan to incorporate the jus soli rule.....	11
3. The “foundling” provision further underlines Congress’s indifference to the parentage of children born in the United States.	14
C. In the 1952 INA, Congress carried forward the rule embodied in the 1940 Act.	15
III. Other provisions of the immigration law are premised on the INA’s extension of citizenship to all persons born in the United States.....	17
IV. Congress has consistently rejected bills that would have amended the INA to incorporate the citizenship rule Defendant urges.....	23

V. The Executive Order violates the Constitution’s separation of powers.	26
CONCLUSION	28

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
Cases
Accardi v. Shaughnessy , 206 F.2d 897 (2d Cir. 1953).....	21
Afroyim v. Rusk , 387 U.S. 253 (1967).....	14
Amy v. Smith , 1 Little 326 (Ky. 1822)	6
Clinton v. City of New York , 524 U.S. 417 (1998).....	26
Dred Scott v. Sandford , 60 U.S. 393 (1857).....	6
Elk v. Wilkins , 112 U.S. 94 (1884).....	4
Ex parte Ng Fung Sing , 6 F.2d 670 (W.D. Wash. 1925).....	17
Faustino v. INS , 302 F. Supp. 212 (S.D.N.Y. 1969)	19
Helvering v. Or. Mut. Life Ins. Co. , 311 U.S. 267 (1940).....	26
In re Look Tin Sing , 21 F. 905 (D. Calif. 1884).....	7
Inglis v. Trustees of Sailors' Snug Harbor , 28 U.S. 99 (1830).....	6

INS v. Chadha ,
462 U.S. 919 (1983).....	26
Kendall v. U.S. ex rel. Stokes ,
37 U.S. 524 (1838).....	27
Lynch v. Clarke ,
1 Sand. Ch. 583 (1844)	6, 10, 11
Matter of Burris ,
15 I&N Dec. 676 (1976)	17
Matter of Moorman ,
19 I&N Dec. 708 (1964)	17
Medellin v. Texas ,
552 U.S. 491 (2008).....	27
Mendez v. Major ,
340 F.2d 128 (8th Cir. 1965)	18
Rogers v. Bellei ,
401 U.S. 815 (1971).....	4
State v. Manuel ,
20 N.C. 144 (1838)	6
United States ex rel. Hintopolous v. Shaughnessy ,
353 U.S. 72 (1957).....	18, 19
United States v. Elm ,
25 F. Cas. 1006 (N.D.N.Y 1877)	7
United States v. Wong Kim Ark ,
169 U.S. 649 (1898).....	3, 8
Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer ,
343 U.S. 579 (1952).....	26, 27

Statutes

Alien Registration Act	20
Immigration Act of 1965	18, 19
Indian Citizenship Act of 1924	4
Nationality Act of 1940	passim
8 U.S.C. § 320	20
8 U.S.C. § 322	20
8 U.S.C. § 334	20
8 U.S.C. § 1101	21
8 U.S.C. § 1151	18, 19
8 U.S.C. § 1152	17
8 U.S.C. § 1158	22
8 U.S.C. § 1159	22, 23
8 U.S.C. § 1229b	21
8 U.S.C. § 1255	23
8 U.S.C. § 1401	passim

Constitutional Provisions

U.S. Const., art. I § 1	26
-------------------------------	----

Legislative Materials

Cong Globe , 39th Cong. 1st Sess.....	7
H.J. Res. 357 (1991).....	24
H.R. Comm. on Immigration and Naturalization, 76th Cong., Report Proposing a Revision And Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States, Part One: Proposed Code with Explanatory Comments (Comm. Print 1939)....	passim

H.R. Rep. No. 1365, 82d Cong 2d Sess. (1952)	16
H.R. 3605 (1991)	24
H.R. 7 (1997)	25
H.R. 73 (1999)	25
H.R. 126 (2009)	25
H.R. 133 (2007)	25
H.R. 140 (2011)	25
H.R. 140 (2013)	25
H.R. 140 (2015)	25
H.R. 140 (2017)	25
H.R. 140 (2019)	25
H.R. 140 (2021)	25
H.R. 569 (2025)	25
H.R. 698 (2005)	25
H.R. 994 (2009)	25
H.R. 1196 (2011)	25
H.R. 1567 (2003)	25
H.R. 1868 (2009)	25
H.R. 1940 (2007)	25
H.R. 4864 (2023)	25
H.R. 5002 (2010)	25
H.R. 6612 (2023)	25
H.R. 6789 (2008)	25
H.R. 8838 (2020)	25
H.R. 9064 (2020)	25
S. Rep. No. 1137, 82d Cong., 2d Sess. (1952)	16
S. Rep. No. 1515, 81st Cong 2d Sess. (1950).....	15

S. 2117 (2005).....	25
S. 301 (2013).....	25
S. 45 (2015).....	25
S. 304 (2025).....	25
S. 4459 (2024).....	25
S. 723 (2011).....	25

Other Authorities

George S. Knight, Nationality Act of 1940 , 26 A.B.A. J. 938 (1940)	9
Some Phases of the Administrative and Judicial Interpretation of the Immigration Act of 1924 , 35 YALE L.J. 705 (1926)	17

INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE¹

Proposed amici are 208 members of Congress, whose full names and titles appear in the Appendix. As members of Congress, including Members of the House Committee on the Judiciary and the House Committee on Homeland Security, amici are well acquainted with our country's laws governing immigration and naturalization, in particular the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (the "INA").

Amici have a compelling interest in ensuring that the Courts uphold not only the United States Constitution, but also the Congressionally enacted INA. As discussed exhaustively in plaintiffs-appellees' (the "States'") brief, the plain language of the Fourteenth Amendment confers citizenship on all persons born in the United States and subject to its laws. But separate and apart from that Constitutional guarantee, the INA evidences Congress' own intent to confer such citizenship. Even if the Court were to accept defendants-appellants' (the "Government's") contorted reading of the Fourteenth Amendment, which it should not, the Court must still uphold the INA. The President's Executive Order seeks to overturn that congressionally enacted statute by executive fiat, thus violating both the INA and the Constitution’s fundamental principle of separation of powers. Amici have a strong interest in preventing those violations.

¹ Amici have requested consent from the parties for leave to file this brief, and all parties have consented. No counsel for any party has authored this brief in whole or in part, and no entity or person, aside from amici curiae and its counsel, made any monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The States’ brief conclusively demonstrates that the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees citizenship to all persons born in the United States and subject to its laws, and we need not repeat that proof here. Amici write instead to make a different point, one that has not received sufficient attention in this litigation: In addition to violating the Fourteenth Amendment, the Executive Order fails for a separate and independent reason—it violates a Congressional mandate set out in statutory law.

Title 8 U.S.C. § 1401(a) provides that any person “born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof” is a citizen of the United States at birth. That statutory command is binding on the Executive. Congress first enacted that language in 1940 with the Nationality Act of 1940, § 201(a), Pub. L. No. 76-853, 54 Stat. 1137, and carried it over without change when it recodified the Nation’s immigration laws in 1952 with passage of the INA. The Government seems to think that its only task here is to convince the Court that the drafters, enactors, and ratifiers of the Fourteenth Amendment in 1868 understood the phrase “subject to the jurisdiction” to incorporate the Government’s atextual theory that people born in the United States and subject to its laws are not U.S. citizens. But that is incorrect. The Government must also show that Congress in 1940—when it commanded that any person “born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof” is a citizen of the United States at birth—also accepted that theory.

The Government cannot make that showing. The legislative history and structure of the Nationality Act of 1940 and the INA make it unmistakably clear that Congress intended and understood its enactments to mandate citizenship for all persons born in the United States, subject only to the limited exceptions set out in United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649 (1898). Indeed, multiple provisions of the INA are premised on that citizenship rule.

The President has no power to deny citizenship where Congress has granted it. Unless and until Congress changes the laws, the President must follow them. His Executive Order violates both the statute and the Constitution’s separation of powers.

ARGUMENT

I. The INA requires affirmance of the preliminary injunction.

The Fourteenth Amendment sets out a constitutional minimum—a floor—for birthright citizenship. At a minimum, birthright citizenship must extend to all “persons born . . . in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof.” But the Fourteenth Amendment does not set out a ceiling. As the Supreme Court has recognized, Congress is free to confer birthright citizenship even more broadly, to people who have no claim to citizenship solely by virtue of the Constitutional text. Rogers v. Bellei, 401 U.S. 815, 830 (1971). Congress has in fact exercised that power, for example granting citizenship “at birth” to certain persons born outside the United States. See 8 U.S.C. § 1401(c), (d), (e), (g), (h). As another example, Congress decreed that members of Indian tribes were citizens at birth, see Indian Citizenship Act of 1924, Pub. L. No. 68-175, 43 Stat. 253 (1924), even after the Supreme Court ruled in Elk v. Wilkins, 112 U.S. 94 (1884), that the Fourteenth Amendment did not make them so.

This means that, even if this Court were to drastically narrow the citizenship guarantee provided by the Fourteenth Amendment, such a misconstruction would have no bearing on the citizenship guarantee provided by the statute enacted by Congress, 8 U.S.C. § 1401. The Government relies on the fact that the statute and the Fourteenth Amendment use the same words (“subject to the jurisdiction thereof”). And so, the Government imagines, if it can convince the Court that that phrase should be read in a manner contrary to its plain meaning, the same argument will suffice for both the Constitution and statute.

But that is incorrect. The 1868 Fourteenth Amendment and the 1940 Nationality Act (reenacted in 1952’s INA) are different documents, enacted by different bodies many years apart, with different legislative histories. To be sure, Congress in 1940 understood the words “subject to the jurisdiction thereof” in the Nationality Act to have the same meaning they attributed to that phrase in the Constitution. But the standard embodied in the 1940 Act is the one that Congress in 1940 understood the Constitution to embody—and we have ample evidence as to what that standard was.

When Congress enacted the Nationality Act in 1940, and re-enacted it in 1952, it understood both the Constitution, and pre-existing statutory law, to grant birthright citizenship to all persons born in the United States, subject only to the exceptions explicitly described in Wong Kim Ark. Congress reaffirmed that understanding and ratified the same standard repeatedly over subsequent years. The Executive may not depart from it now.

II. Congress, in mandating citizenship for all persons “born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof,” legislated a robust version of jus soli.

A. Background

Under the British common law, a person’s birth anywhere within the sovereign’s territorial jurisdiction conferred the status of British subject. United States courts before 1866 ruled consistently that the same common-law rule (known as jus soli)² applied in this country—that citizenship attached to all persons born within our borders and subject to our laws. See, e.g., Inglis v. Trustees of Sailors' Snug Harbor, 28 U.S. 99, 164 (1830) (opinion of Story, J.); State v. Manuel, 20 N.C. 144 (1838); Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sand. Ch. 583 (1844).

² The jus soli rule relies on the child’s place of birth (or soil) to determine citizenship, while jus sanguinis, which comes from Roman law, relies on a child’s parentage (or blood) to determine citizenship.

Even when some courts adopted the view that free Black persons should not enjoy citizenship in this country, they did not challenge the jus soli rule or endorse the claim that parentage should displace place of birth as the source of American citizenship. Instead, courts in Southern states developed a new exception to jus soli, under which a state's systematically depriving a class of people of the rights and privileges of citizenship meant that members of the disfavored class could not, "in the proper sense of the term," be deemed citizens. Amy v. Smith, 1 Little 326, 334 (Ky. 1822). Chief Justice Taney in Dred Scott v. Sandford, 60 U.S. 393 (1857), developed a simpler rule—that no person could be a citizen if that person were Black. But even Chief Justice Taney saw his rule as an exception to the generally applicable principle of jus soli. See id. at 417 (explaining that naturalization was by its nature inapplicable to persons born in the United States).

In 1866, Congress for the first time fixed territorial birthright citizenship in statute. It enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1866, which began with the words, "[A]ll persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed, are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States." Senate Judiciary Chair Lyman Trumbull, who introduced the bill, explained that its language carried forward the existing common law, so that “children who are born here of parents who have not been naturalized are citizens.” Cong Globe, 39th Cong. 1st Sess. 498 (Jan. 30, 1866); see also id. at 1757 (Apr. 4, 1866) (“[E]ven the infant child of a foreigner born in this land is a citizen of the United States long before his father.”).

In the congressional debate over the Fourteenth Amendment two years later, proponents explicitly stated that they too meant to carry forward the common-law rule: citizenship derived from a person’s being “born within the limits of the United States and subject to their laws.” Id. at 2765 (May 23, 1866) (Sen. Howard). The phrase “subject to the jurisdiction” in the constitutional text, they explained, meant that the individual at birth must be subject to U.S. law—not born as a member of an Indian tribe subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the tribe rather than that of the U.S. government, or into the family of a foreign ambassador. See id. at 2893-94 (May 30, 1866) (Sen. Trumbull); see also id. at 2897 (Sen. Williams); id. at 3031-32 (Jun. 8, 1866) (Sen. Henderson). Courts agreed. See United States v. Elm, 25 F. Cas. 1006, 1006-07 (N.D.N.Y. 1877); In re Look Tin Sing, 21 F. 905, 606 (D. Calif. 1884) (Field, J., sitting as Circuit Justice).

When United States v. Wong Kim Ark was argued thirty years later, even the Solicitor General—arguing against Mr. Wong’s citizenship—was forced to concede that the common-law rule was reflected in unbroken longstanding precedent. As he put it, “the opinions of the Attorneys-General, the decisions of the Federal and State courts, and, up until 1885, the rulings of the State Department all concurred in the view that birth in the United States conferred citizenship.” Brief for the United States at 28, United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U.S. 649 (1898).

The Supreme Court in Wong Kim Ark upheld that unbroken precedent. It held, emphatically, that the Fourteenth Amendment brought forward the common-law rule. That is, United States citizenship had always (aside from Black persons under Dred Scott) encompassed everyone “born in the United States,” excluding only “children of foreign sovereigns or their ministers, or born on foreign public ships, or of enemies within and during a hostile occupation of part of our territory, [or] children of members of [] Indian tribes.” 169 U.S. at 693.

With respect to the Civil Rights Act of 1866, the Supreme Court found it beyond doubt that that statute did not “exclude any children born in this country from the citizenship which would theretofore have been their birthright.” Id. at 688. Rather, it affirmed their status, ensuring citizenship for all “native-born children of foreign . . . parents not in the diplomatic service of their own country, nor in hostile occupation of part of our territory.” Id.

B. In Section 201(a) of the Nationality Act of 1940, reenacted in the INA, Congress continued to embrace a robust version of jus soli.

The 1866 Civil Rights Act’s definition of United States birthright citizenship remained in force for seventy-four years. The road to a new statute began in 1933, when President Roosevelt directed a group of agencies to recommend a revision and codification of the country's citizenship laws. Exec. Order No. 6115, Revision and Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States (Apr. 25, 1933). Seven years later, the result was the Nationality Act of 1940.

The 1940 Act changed the statutory language governing birthright citizenship, but it did not change its substance. Instead of the phrase used in the 1866 Civil Rights Act—"not subject to any foreign power, excluding Indians not taxed"—the 1940 Act used the language contained in the Fourteenth Amendment—"subject to the jurisdiction thereof." The legislative and drafting history of the Act makes clear that Congress intended to maintain the same jus soli principle incorporated in both the 1866 Act and the Fourteenth Amendment.

That legislative history includes two key sources. First, the executive agencies, tasked by President Roosevelt with proposing a recodification of the nation's citizenship laws, transmitted to Congress a proposed Revision and Codification of the Nationality Laws of the United States, together with explanatory commentary. H.R. COMM. ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION, 76TH CONG., REPORT PROPOSING A REVISION AND CODIFICATION OF THE NATIONALITY LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES, PART ONE: PROPOSED CODE WITH EXPLANATORY COMMENTS (Comm. Print 1939) (hereafter, "Revision and Codification"); see George S. Knight, Nationality Act of 1940, 26 A.B.A. J. 938 (1940). Second, in response to the Revision and Codification, the House and Senate conducted extensive hearings. Each of those sources makes plain Congress’s desire to maintain jus soli citizenship for all those born in the territory of the United States.

1. The Revision and Codification explicitly endorsed jus soli.

The Revision and Codification’s explanatory notes provided that the draft language in proposed section 201(a), like that of the 1866 Civil Rights Act, was “a statement of the common-law rule, which has been in effect in the United States from the beginning.” Revision and Codification, at 7. The Commentary explained the guiding principle of this rule in the same way that the Supreme Court did in Wong Kim Ark: The rule extended citizenship to all persons born in the United States, with the limited exceptions set out in that case. See id. The Revision and Codification took pains to emphasize that although the petitioner in Wong Kim Ark had been born to parents who were domiciled in the United States according to the submitted facts stipulated in that case, the rule of Wong Kim Ark—and of section 201—extended beyond those facts. It was “also applicable to a child born in the United States of parents residing therein temporarily.” Id.

The Revision and Codification, supporting this conclusion, noted that Wong Kim Ark had relied on Lynch v. Clarke, 1 Sand. Ch. 583 (1844). That case involved a child born in New York during her parents’ “temporary sojourn” to this country. While still only a few months old, she relocated with her parents to Ireland. Upon returning to the U.S. fifteen years later, her right to collect an inheritance turned on whether she was a U.S. citizen at birth. The court held that the common-law rule applied, and that under that rule she was “indisputabl[y]” a citizen. 1 Sand. Ch., at 639. Indeed, there was “no doubt, but that by the law of the United States, every person born within the dominions and allegiance of the United States, whatever were the situation of his parents, is a natural born citizen.” Id. at 663 (emphasis added). The Revision and Codification summed up all the case law reflected in section 201 as follows: “[I]t is the fact of birth within the territory and jurisdiction, and not the domicile of the parents, which determines the nationality of the child.” Revision and Codification, at 7.

2. The legislative hearings make plain Congress’s plan to incorporate the jus soli rule.

The Congressional hearings demonstrate that the legislators, while emphasizing their independent obligation to set statutory meaning (see To Revise and Codify the Nationality Laws of the United States into a Comprehensive Nationality Code: Hearings Before the Comm. on Immigr. and Naturalization, 76th Cong.), agreed with the drafters of the Revision and Codification that all persons born in the United States were citizens. The colloquies make clear the Members’ understanding that while Congress could vary its rules granting citizenship to children born abroad, the U.S. citizenship of children born here was a given. As one deputy commissioner put it: “In the United States, insofar as the question of citizenship is concerned, the doctrine of jus soli applies.” To Revise and Codify the Nationality Laws of the United States into a Comprehensive Nationality Code: Hearings Before the Subcomm. of the Comm. on Immigr. and Naturalization, 76th Cong. 49 (Feb. 12, 1940). Congressman Poage agreed: “the Constitution makes that apply.” Id. In the same hearing, Congressman Poage emphasized that jus soli citizenship was “based on the constitutional provision that all persons born in the United States are citizens thereof[.]” Id. at 37.

Congress understood the principle of jus soli to apply even to children born of temporary visitors who had minimal ties to the United States. In a meeting of the full Immigration and Naturalization Committee, Congressman Curtis posed the following hypothetical: “Just one more question. We will suppose a Frenchman and his wife [came] over here from France on a visitor’s visa and 2 weeks after they arrive in this country there is to them born a child. What is the nationality of that child?” To Revise and Codify the Nationality Laws: Hearings Before the Comm. on Immigr. and Naturalization, at 246 (May 2, 1940). Both the witness and a second Congressman responded that the child would be an American citizen. The Chairman of the Committee pointed out the anomaly that “under French law they can claim him as a Frenchman,” but Congressman Curtis stood firm: “And yet that child has been born within the territory of the United States and is declared by law to be a citizen of the United States.” Id.

The implications of that rule concerned some members of Congress and of the Administration. In one hearing, for example, a representative of the State Department testified:

Another class [of citizens] is composed of those persons who are born in the United States of alien parents and are taken by their parents to the countries from which the parents came and of which they are nationals. . . .

Many of them are taken in early infancy. There are hundreds of thousands of those persons living around different parts of the world who happen to have been born here and acquire citizenship under the fourteenth amendment, but they are brought up in the countries of their parents and they are in no true sense American, and yet they may not only enter this country themselves as citizens, but may marry aliens in those countries and have children and those children are born citizens.

To Revise and Codify the Nationality Laws: Hearings Before the Subcomm. of the Comm. on Immigr. and Naturalization, at 37 (Feb. 12, 1940). But the proper response to this concern, he continued, was not a change to the jus soli rule. Rather, he explained, “[w]e have control over citizens born abroad, and we also have control over the question of expatriation.” Id. That is, Congress could address the issue by providing a means for these citizens to lose their citizenship after living abroad.³ Or

³ Congress had done just that, responding to a similar concern, in the context of certain children born outside the United States with citizenship jus sanguinis. See Nationality Act of 1940, § 201(g) (if the child does not “reside in the United States”

Congress might provide a means to restrict the ability of U.S. citizens to transmit their citizenship when having children outside of the United States. The witness was emphatic, however, that “no one proposes” to restrict jus soli citizenship, id. at 38. Indeed, he stated, such a change would be absurd.

3. The “foundling” provision further underlines Congress’s indifference to the parentage of children born in the United States.

The irrelevance of parentage to the citizenship of children born in the United States is further demonstrated by the 1940 Nationality Act’s “foundling” provision. Section 201(f) of the Act, as enacted, conferred citizenship on a “child of unknown parentage found in the United States, until shown not to have been born in the United States.” Nationality Act of 1940, § 201(f), Pub. L. No. 76-853, 54 Stat. 1137.

The foundling provision, still in force with minor changes, see 8 U.S.C. § 1401(f), created a presumption of birth inside the United States for any child found within the territory of the United States. It gives no consideration to the status of the child’s (unknown) parents, reflecting a conviction that the identity and status of those parents is unimportant. Had Congress intended to exclude children of for “five years between the ages of thirteen and twenty-one . . . his American citizenship shall thereupon cease”). More recent case law has placed sharp limits on Congress’s ability to take away citizenship from persons entitled to it by virtue of their birth in the United States. See Afroyim v. Rusk, 387 U.S. 253 (1967).

temporary visitors or undocumented non-citizens from citizenship, then the foundling provision would have made little sense. Indeed, it might have encouraged those same parents to abandon their children. Rather, the foundling provision encapsulates what the Report commentary began with: “[I]t is the fact of birth within the territory and jurisdiction, and not the domicile of the parents, which determines the nationality of the child.” Revision and Codification, at 7.

C. In the 1952 INA, Congress carried forward the rule embodied in the 1940 Act.

In 1952, Congress recodified the Nation’s immigration and nationality laws in the INA. The new statute carried forward § 201 of the Nationality Act of 1940, without change, at 8 U.S.C. § 1401(a). Once again, the legislative history is plain that Congress intended to re-inscribe the rule that all persons born in the United States (putting aside the narrow Wong Kim Ark exceptions) are citizens.

To begin, the 1950 Senate Judiciary Committee report on The Immigration and Naturalization Systems of the United States explained that under existing law, “all native-born persons, except those born of parents who are in the diplomatic service of foreign states, are citizens at birth.” Senate Judiciary Comm., The Immigration and Naturalization Systems of the United States, S. Rep. No. 1515, 81st Cong, 2d Sess. 685 (1950).

The Congressional hearings preceding enactment of the 1952 bill reflected the same understanding. As one witness put it, if a child is born to a noncitizen held in detention on U.S. soil after seeking admission at the border, “[t]his child is, of course, a citizen of the United States. There can be no question about that.” See Revision of Immigration, Naturalization, and Nationality Laws: Joint Hearings Before the Subcomms. of the Comms. on the Judiciary, 82d Cong. 188 (Mar. 9, 1951). Another witness stated that, if a noncitizen arrives in the United States as a temporary visitor, overstays, applies for suspension of deportation, and fathers children while waiting for the application to be adjudicated, those children “are, of course, American citizens.” Id. at 327 (Mar. 14, 1951).

The 1952 INA carried that law forward. See H.R. Rep. No. 1365, 82d Cong. 2d Sess. 76 (1952) (the 1952 statute carried forward the birthright citizenship provisions of the Nationality Act of 1940); S. Rep. No. 1137, 82d Cong., 2d Sess. 38 (1952) (same; “[t]he only exceptions are those persons born in the United States to alien diplomats”); H.R. Rep. No. 1365, supra, at 25 (same).⁴

⁴ The immigration title of the 1952 Act includes one provision that bears explanation. In setting out the “national origins” system of immigration quotas, which depended on the country in which a person was born, section 202(a)(3) of the Act provided: “[A]n alien born in the United States shall be considered as having been born in the country of which he is a citizen or subject, or if he is not a citizen or subject of any country then in the last foreign country in which he had his residence.” This provision was a rewording and updating of § 12(a) of the Immigration Act of 1924, which read: “An immigrant born in the United States who has lost his United States citizenship shall be considered as having been born in the country of which he is a citizen or subject.” Immigration Act of 1924, § 12(a), 43 Stat. 160 (1924). See H.R.

III. Other provisions of the immigration law are premised on the INA's extension of citizenship to all persons born in the United States.

Congress has amended the immigration law repeatedly over the years. Several of those amendments have implemented policies directly connected to the statute's extension of citizenship to all persons born in the United States. Indeed, the amendments would have rendered the law incoherent if not for the jus soli rule.

One example is the 1965 Immigration and Nationality Act's definition of the category of "immediate relative." Immigrants to the United States had long been subject to a complex set of numerical limitations and quotas. Spouses and minor children of U.S. citizens had been exempt from those quotas, on the theory that citizens should have the companionship of their close family members. In 1965, Congress introduced an innovation: Certain parents of U.S. citizens would also be treated as "immediate relatives," and gain the same favorable immigration status.

Rep. No. 1365, 82d Cong., 2d Sess. 119 (1952) (side-by-side comparison of existing and proposed law, setting out the two provisions in opposite columns). The 1952 provision, whose modern counterpart is 8 U.S.C. § 1152(b)(3), has only been applied to birthright United States citizens who later accepted or manifested citizenship in another country and thus lost their U.S. citizenship. See Matter of Burris, 15 I&N Dec. 676 (1976); Matter of Moorman, 19 I&N Dec. 708 (1964). For the similar application of the older law, see, e.g., Ex parte Ng Fung Sing, 6 F.2d 670 (W.D. Wash. 1925) (Ms. Ng was born a U.S. citizen but married a noncitizen, which under then-extant law expatriated her); see also Philip C. Jessup, Some Phases of the Administrative and Judicial Interpretation of the Immigration Act of 1924, 35 YALE L.J. 705, 723 (1926).

The 1965 Act thus defined its “immediate relative” category to include “the children, spouses, and parents of a citizen of the United States: Provided, That in the case of parents, such citizen must be at least twenty-one years of age.” Immigration Act of 1965, Pub. L. 89-236, 79 Stat. 911, § 1. That definition remains the law today. 8 U.S.C. § 1151(b)(2)(A)(i).

Two things are notable about the 1965 Act’s “immediate relative” definition. First, Congress’s reason for including the proviso—directing that parents of minor U.S. citizen children would not be “immediate relatives”—was precisely because all children born in the United States were U.S. citizens. The Congressional drafters were aware of the recent case of United States ex rel. Hintopolous v. Shaughnessy, 353 U.S. 72 (1957), in which Mr. and Mrs. Hintopolous had been illegally present in the United States and had a child during their unauthorized stay. They then applied for suspension of deportation, noting the hardship to their infant child if they were to be forced out of the country. Justice Harlan, writing for the Court, noted that “the child is, of course, an American citizen by birth.” But the Court upheld the hearing officer’s decision to deny relief. Id. at 73; see also, e.g., Mendez v. Major, 340 F.2d 128, 132 (8th Cir. 1965).

In the hearings leading to enactment of the 1965 Act, both the legislators and the Executive were mindful that all children born in the United States were U.S. citizens. They wanted adult U.S. citizens to be able to bring their parents to this country, but felt that it would be problematic if foreigners could gain special immigration rights simply by virtue of having a baby in this country and thereby becoming the parents of a U.S. citizen. See Immigration: Hearings Before the Subcomm. on Immigration and Naturalization of the S. Comm. on Judiciary, 89th Cong. 270 (Mar. 5, 1965) (Sen. Ervin) (absent restrictive language, all “a married couple from some foreign country would have to do . . . to become eligible for admittance to America immediately as nonquota immigrants would be to arrange to come over under a temporary visa and have the wife give birth to a child while here”); id. (Assistant Attorney General Schlei) (same). The over-21 requirement responded to that concern, ensuring that while a child born here had American citizenship at birth, that fact did not provide immediate immigration benefits to the child’s parents. See Faustino v. INS, 302 F. Supp. 212, 214-215 (S.D.N.Y. 1969), aff’d, 432 F.2d 429 (2d Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 921 (1971).

Second, the very fact that Congress saw the need to legislate regarding parents of U.S. citizen minor children, excluding them from the “immediate relative” definition, 8 U.S.C. § 1151(b)(2)(A)(i), demonstrates the statutory jus soli rule. People seeking “immediate relative” status under the 1965 Act were not themselves citizens or lawful permanent residents. Immigration Act of 1965, Pub. L. 89-236, 79 Stat. 911, § 1. So how would such people come to be parents of U.S. citizen children in the first place? As a general matter, the answer was the jus soli rule embodied in the statute. Because a minor child could not become a naturalized citizen except derivatively (that is, by virtue of having a citizen parent), see 8 U.S.C. §§ 320, 322, 334(b), its only avenues for citizenship were having a U.S. citizen parent or being born in this country.⁵

The immigration law's hardship waiver provisions make this even plainer. Those provisions address cases like those of Mr. and Mrs. Hintopolous. While Congress did not want the illegally present parents to derive immigration benefits automatically, solely by virtue of their child's birth here, Congress concluded that it did want immigration authorities to have the discretion to allow parents to stay in this country, given the possibility of hardship to their U.S. citizen child.

Thus, in 1940, Congress gave the Attorney General discretion to suspend a noncitizen's deportation if "deportation would result in serious economic detriment" to the noncitizen's minor U.S. citizen child. Alien Registration Act, Pub. L. 76-670, 54 Stat. 670, 672, § 19(c) (1940). The modern version of that provision is 8 U.S.C.

⁵ It's possible to imagine uncommon cases not implicating jus soli in which a noncitizen could become the parent of a citizen minor child, who but for the 21-year-old limitation could petition for him as an immediate relative. In theory, for example, a noncitizen could have married a U.S. citizen, who later bore his child outside the United States (after having satisfied the law's residency requirements, so that the child was a citizen jus sanguinis), and then divorced the citizen spouse, and still later entered illegally with the child. Or a noncitizen could adopt a U.S. citizen child. But as the legislative history quoted above makes clear, those are not the cases Congress had in mind.

§ 1229b(b), which allows an Immigration Judge to “cancel” the removal of a noncitizen who is in the United States without status or on a temporary visa, on a showing of sufficient hardship to the noncitizen’s United States citizen or lawful permanent resident spouse or unmarried minor child.⁶

From the beginning, the Board of Immigration Appeals and the courts effectuated Congress’s intent that discretionary relief would be available for illegally present noncitizens with children who were citizens by virtue of having been born in the United States. See, e.g., Accardi v. Shaugnessy, 206 F.2d 897, 899 (2d Cir. 1953) (Mr Accardi entered illegally, married a noncitizen, and had a child who was a U.S. citizen by virtue of having been born in this country; the agency recognized his eligibility for relief, but denied it as a matter of discretion), rev’d, 347 U.S. 260 (1954) (remanding for a new determination). Indeed, once again, the category of applicants with U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident unmarried minor children would be very nearly empty but for Congress’s mandate that children born in the United States are United States citizens. The persons applying for cancellation of removal under § 1229b(b) are illegally present or here on temporary visas. Their unmarried minor children born outside of the United States have no better status than they. If they have unmarried minor children who are U.S. citizens, it will generally be by virtue of the jus soli rule.

⁶ The statute references the noncitizen’s “child,” but by virtue of 8 U.S.C. § 1101(b)(1), the word “child” in this portion of the statute is limited to “an unmarried [child] under twenty-one years of age.”

More generally, the INA relies on the jus soli rule to a degree that its outcomes would be incoherent in that rule's absence. Consider the following example: A noncitizen arrives in the United States with her husband, fleeing persecution in a foreign country. An Immigration Judge grants her and her husband asylum under 8 U.S.C. § 1158. Before they can adjust to lawful permanent resident status, they have a baby girl. Under the rule prescribed by Congress, that girl is a U.S. citizen, and her future here is secure.

Under the rule urged by the Government, on the other hand, the result is a hash. Depending on the laws of the country her parents fled, the girl is either a citizen of that country or is stateless. Either way, she has no valid immigration status in the United States. She does not partake of her parents' asylee status. See 8 U.S.C. § 1158(b)(3)(A) (derivative asylum is available to children "accompanying, or following to join" the asylee, but both of those terms require the derivative asylee to have been admitted to the United States from another country, as the girl was not, and to already have been born when asylum was granted, as the girl was not).

The girl's parents are eligible to become lawful permanent residents under 8 U.S.C. § 1159(b), but the girl isn't, because adjustment under that provision is only available to persons who were “granted asylum”—which, again, she was not. Id. § 1159(b)(2).

Even after her parents become lawful permanent residents, they will not be able to petition for her adjustment to lawful permanent resident status under 8 U.S.C. § 1255(a), because that provision is only available if the beneficiary was “admitted or paroled into the United States”—which she was not. So she will lack status, and, absent some form of official mercy, she will have to leave the United States, and presumably her parents with her. Yet the only place the family will be able to go will be the country of persecution that her parents fled, and to which under United States and international law they cannot be forced to return.

The point of this example is not that the consequences of the Government’s proposed rule would be nonsensical and harsh—though they would be. The point is that they would be nonsensical and harsh because the immigration statute, in its length and breadth, is built around the validity of the jus soli rule that Congress first enacted in 1866 and re-enacted in 1940 and 1952. If Congress were to repeal its jus soli rule, it would have to rewrite the rest of the statute.

IV. Congress has consistently rejected bills that would have amended the INA to incorporate the citizenship rule Defendant urges.

Critics of the jus soli rule have long recognized that the INA is inconsistent with their preferred result. Thus, for more than three decades, such critics have introduced bills in Congress seeking to amend the statute to eliminate the provisions guaranteeing birthright citizenship. These bills are significant in at least two respects. First, the efforts to amend the INA to eliminate birthright citizenship represent a concession by lawmakers that the statute does in fact provide for such citizenship. Second, Congress has rejected every one of those proposed bills.

One such bill was introduced in 1991, as part of a package comprising two pieces of legislation. The first component was H.J. Res. 357, 102d Cong., 1st Sess. (1991), which proposed a constitutional amendment that would eliminate the birthright citizenship guarantee for any person whose mother was not a “legal resident[]” of the United States. The second component was H.R. 3605, 102d Cong., 1st Sess. (1991). That bill—which provided that it would become effective only after ratification of the above proposed constitutional amendment—proposed a parallel amendment to 8 U.S.C. § 1401(a) to cut back on the statutory citizenship guarantee.

The sponsors of these bills, in other words, understood that if their approach were to become law, they would have to overcome both a constitutional provision mandating citizenship for all persons born in the United States and a statutory provision doing the same. Congress, however, refused the sponsors’ invitation; it declined to enact either bill.

In fact, bills to amend the INA to eliminate its guarantee of citizenship to all persons born in the United States have been introduced—and rejected—in nearly every Congress from 1991 to the present. The most recent was introduced less than three months ago. See, e.g., H.R. 7, 105th Cong., 1st Sess. (1997); H.R. 73, 106th Cong., 1st Sess. (1999); H.R. 1567, 108th Cong., 1st Sess. (2003); H.R. 698, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. (2005); S. 2117, 109th Cong., 1st Sess. (2005); H.R. 133, 110th Cong., 1st Sess. (2007); H.R. 1940, 110th Cong., 1st Sess. (2007); H.R. 6789, 110th Cong., 2d Sess. (2008); H.R. 126, 111th Cong., 1st Sess. (2009); H.R. 994, 111th Cong., 1st Sess. (2009); H.R. 1868, 111th Cong., 1st Sess. (2009); H.R. 5002, 111th Cong., 2d Sess. (2010); H.R. 140, 112th Cong., 1st Sess. (2011); H.R. 1196, 112th Cong., 1st Sess. (2011); S. 723, 112th Cong., 1st Sess. (2011); H.R. 140, 113th Cong., 1st Sess. (2013); S. 301, 113th Cong., 1st Sess. (2013); H.R. 140, 114th Cong., 1st Sess. (2015); S. 45, 114th Cong., 1st Sess. (2015); H.R. 140, 115th Cong., 1st Sess. (2017); H.R. 140, 116th Cong., 1st Sess. (2019); H.R. 8838, 116th Cong., 2d Sess. (2020); H.R. 9064, 116th Cong., 2d Sess. (2020); H.R. 140, 117th Cong., 1st Sess. (2021); H.R. 4864, 118th Cong., 1st Sess. (2023); H.R. 6612, 118th Cong., 1st Sess. (2023); S. 4459, 118th Cong., 2d Sess. (2024); H.R. 569, 119th Cong., 1st Sess. (2025); S. 304, 119th Cong., 1st Sess. (2025).

This long history makes two things clear. First, legislators on all sides of the debate understood that the INA now in force mandates birthright citizenship for all persons born in the United States. That mandate stays in force unless and until Congress amends the statute. And second, Congress has refused to amend the statute. It has maintained jus soli citizenship as a statutory command.

V. The Executive Order violates the Constitution’s separation of powers.

Beginning over thirty years ago, opponents of birthright citizenship have striven to change the law by constitutional means—the democratic process of introducing bills in Congress both to amend the INA, and to begin the process of Constitutional amendment. Those efforts having failed, the Executive now seeks to achieve its objective in a different way. Rather than honoring the Constitution and the democratic method, the Executive Order seeks to attain the administration’s goals by unilateral executive fiat. This blatantly illegal act violates both the INA and the Constitution's fundamental principle of separation of powers.

“The President’s power, if any, to issue [an] order must stem either from an act of Congress or from the Constitution itself.” Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 585 (1952). As to the latter, Article I vests “[a]ll legislative powers” in Congress, U.S. Const., art. I, § 1, and “no provision in the Constitution [] authorizes the President to enact, to amend, or to repeal statutes,” Clinton v. City of New York, 524 U.S. 417, 438 (1998), including the INA. That power rests with Congress, and Congress alone. See INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 954 (1983) (The “repeal of statutes, no less than enactment, must conform with Art. I.”); see also Helvering v. Or. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 311 U.S. 267, 272 (1940) (concluding that “only Congress can take away” a particular right conferred by statute). “As Madison explained in The Federalist No. 47, under our constitutional system of checks and balances, ‘the magistrate in whom the whole executive power resides cannot of himself make a law.’” Medellin v. Texas, 552 U.S. 491, 527-28 (2008) (quoting J. E. Cooke, The Federalist 326 (1961)). To hold otherwise “would be clothing the President with a power entirely to control the legislation of congress.” Kendall v. U.S. ex rel. Stokes, 37 U.S. 524, 613 (1838).

Nor is there a statutory basis for the President’s actions. There “is no statute that expressly authorizes the President” to overturn the INA, and there is no “act of Congress” from which such a power can be fairly implied. See Youngstown, 343 U.S. at 585. Without power “from the Constitution itself” or “an act of Congress,” id.—both of which are wholly lacking here—a President who disagrees with a law enacted by Congress is “limit[ed] . . . to the recommending of laws he thinks wise and the vetoing of laws he thinks bad,” id. at 587.

In other words, the President must participate in the political process and adhere to our Constitutional structure, not simply ignore them. And unless and until Congress changes the laws, the President must follow them. Here, however, rather than trying to persuade Congress to exercise its authority to amend or repeal the INA, the President seeks to evade that well-established process with an unconstitutional power grab. That cannot stand.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court should affirm the preliminary injunction ordered by the District Court.

Date: April 11, 2025

Douglas Jensen*
Michael Bass*
SHER TREMONTE LLP
90 Broad St., 23rd Fl.
New York, NY 10004
(212) 202-2600
djensen@shertremonte.com
mbass@shertremonte.com

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ Jonathan Weinberg
Jonathan Weinberg
Distinguished Professor of Law
WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY
471 W. Palmer Ave.
Detroit, MI 48202
weinberg@wayne.edu

/s/ Linus Chan
Linus Chan*
Clinical Professor of Law
UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA
229 19th Ave. South
Minneapolis, MN 55455
(612) 301-1156
rlchan@umn.edu

 Application for 9th Circuit admission pending*

Counsel for Amici Curiae 208 Members of Congress

APPENDIX: LIST OF AMICI CURIAE

1. Jamie Raskin
Representative of Maryland
2. Pramila Jayapal
Representative of Washington
3. Bennie G. Thompson
Representative of Mississippi
4. Adriano Espaillat
Representative of New York
5. Yvette Clarke
Representative of New York
6. Grace Meng
Representative of New York
7. Jerrold Nadler
Representative of New York
8. Bradley Scott Schneider
Representative of Illinois
9. Hakeem Jeffries
Representative of New York
10. Katherine Clark
Representative of Massachusetts
11. Pete Aguilar
Representative of California
12. Joe Neguse
Representative of Colorado
13. Rosa L. DeLauro
Representative of Connecticut
14. Gerald E. Connolly
Representative of Virginia
15. Alma S. Adams, Ph.D.
Representative of North Carolina
16. Gabe Amo
Representative of Rhode Island
17. Yassamin Ansari
Representative of Arizona
18. Jake Auchincloss
Representative of Massachusetts
19. Becca Balint
Representative of Vermont
20. Nanette Barragán
Representative of California
21. Joyce Beatty
Representative of Ohio
22. Wesley Bell
Representative of Missouri
23. Ami Bera, M.D.
Representative of California
24. Donald S. Beyer Jr.
Representative of Virginia
25. Sanford D. Bishop, Jr.
Representative of Georgia
26. Janelle Bynum
Representative of Oregon

27. Brendan F. Boyle
Representative of Pennsylvania

28. Shontel Brown
Representative of Ohio

29. Julia Brownley
Representative of California

30. Nikki Budzinski
Representative of Illinois

31. Salud O. Carbajal
Representative of California

32. André Carson
Representative of Indiana

33. Troy A. Carter, Sr.
Representative of Louisiana

34. Greg Casar
Representative of Texas

35. Sean Casten
Representative of Illinois

36. Kathy Castor
Representative of Florida

37. Joaquin Castro
Representative of Texas

38. Sheila Cherfilus-McCormick
Representative of Florida

39. Judy Chu
Representative of California

40. Gilbert R. Cisneros, Jr.
Representative of California

41. Emanuel Cleaver, II
Representative of Missouri

42. James E. Clyburn
Representative of South Carolina

43. Steve Cohen
Representative of Tennessee

44. Herbert C. Conaway, Jr.
Representative of New Jersey

45. J. Luis Correa
Representative of California

46. Jim Costa
Representative of California

47. Joe Courtney
Representative of Connecticut

48. Angie Craig
Representative of Minnesota

49. Jasmine Crockett
Representative of Texas

50. Jason Crow
Representative of Colorado

51. Henry Cuellar
Representative of Texas

52. Danny K. Davis
Representative of Illinois

53. Madeleine Dean
Representative of Pennsylvania

54. Diana DeGette
Representative of Colorado

55. Suzan K. DelBene
Representative of Washington

56. Chris Deluzio
Representative of Pennsylvania

57. Mark DeSaulnier
Representative of California

58. Maxine Dexter
Representative of Oregon

59. Debbie Dingell
Representative of Michigan

60. Lloyd Doggett
Representative of Texas

61. Sarah Elfreth
Representative of Maryland

62. Veronica Escobar
Representative of Texas

63. Dwight Evans
Representative of Pennsylvania

64. Cleo Fields
Representative of Louisiana

65. Shomari C. Figures
Representative of Alabama

66. Lizzie Fletcher
Representative of Texas

67. Bill Foster
Representative of Illinois

68. Valerie P. Foushee
Representative of North Carolina

69. Lois Frankel
Representative of Florida

70. Laura Friedman
Representative of California

71. Maxwell Alejandro Frost
Representative of Florida

72. John Garamendi
Representative of California

73. Jesús G. “Chuy” García
Representative of Illinois

74. Robert Garcia
Representative of California

75. Sylvia Garcia
Representative of Texas

76. Dan Goldman
Representative of New York

77. Jimmy Gomez
Representative of California

78. Vicente Gonzalez
Representative of Texas

79. Maggie Goodlander
Representative of New Hampshire

80. Josh Gottheimer
Representative of New Jersey

81. Al Green
Representative of Texas

82. Josh Harder
Representative of California

83. Jahana Hayes
Representative of Connecticut

84. Pablo José Hernández
Representative of Puerto Rico

85. Jim Himes
Representative of Connecticut

86. Steven Horsford
Representative of Nevada

87. Chrissy Houlahan
Representative of Pennsylvania

88. Steny H. Hoyer
Representative of Maryland

89. Val Hoyle
Representative of Oregon

90. Jared Huffman
Representative of California

91. Glenn F. Ivey
Representative of Maryland

92. Jonathan L. Jackson
Representative of Illinois

93. Sara Jacobs
Representative of California

94. Henry C. “Hank” Johnson, Jr.
Representative of Georgia

95. Julie Johnson
Representative of Texas

96. Sydney Kamlager-Dove
Representative of California

97. Marcy Kaptur
Representative of Ohio

98. William Keating
Representative of Massachusetts

99. Robin L. Kelly
Representative of Illinois

100. Timothy M. Kennedy
Representative of New York

101. Ro Khanna
Representative of California

102. Raja Krishnamoorthi
Representative of Illinois

103. Greg Landsman
Representative of Ohio

104. Rick Larsen
Representative of Washington

105. John B. Larson
Representative of Connecticut

106. George Latimer
Representative of New York

107. Summer L. Lee
Representative of Pennsylvania

108. Susie Lee
Representative of Nevada

109. Teresa Leger Fernández
Representative of New Mexico

110. Mike Levin
Representative of California

111. Sam T. Liccardo
Representative of California

112. Ted W. Lieu
Representative of California

113. Zoe Lofgren
Representative of California

114. Stephen F. Lynch
Representative of Massachusetts

115. Seth Magaziner
Representative of Rhode Island

116. John W. Mannion
Representative of New York

117. Doris Matsui
Representative of California

118. Lucy McBath
Representative of Georgia

119. Sarah McBride
Representative of Delaware

120. April McClain Delaney
Representative of Maryland

121. Jennifer L. McClellan
Representative of Virginia

122. Betty McCollum
Representative of Minnesota

123. Kristen McDonald Rivet
Representative of Michigan

124. Morgan McGarvey
Representative of Kentucky

125. James P. McGovern
Representative of Massachusetts

126. LaMonica McIver
Representative of New Jersey

127. Gregory W. Meeks
Representative of New York

128. Robert J. Menendez
Representative of New Jersey

129. Kweisi Mfume
Representative of Maryland

130. Dave Min
Representative of California

131. Gwen S. Moore
Representative of Wisconsin

132. Joseph D. Morelle
Representative of New York

133. Kelly Morrison
Representative of Minnesota

134. Jared Moskowitz
Representative of Florida

135. Seth Moulton
Representative of Massachusetts

136. Frank J. Mrvan
Representative of Indiana

137. Kevin Mullin
Representative of California

138. Richard E. Neal
Representative of Massachusetts

139. Donald Norcross
Representative of New Jersey

140. Eleanor Holmes Norton Representative of the District of Columbia

141. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez
Representative of New York

142. Johnny Olszewski
Representative of Maryland

143. Ilhan Omar
Representative of Minnesota

144. Frank Pallone, Jr.
Representative of New Jersey

145. Jimmy Panetta
Representative of California

146. Chris Pappas
Representative of New Hampshire

147. Nancy Pelosi
Representative of California

148. Scott H. Peters
Representative of California

149. Brittany Pettersen
Representative of Colorado

150. Chellie Pingree
Representative of Maine

151. Stacey E. Plaskett
Representative of the Virgin Islands

152. Mark Pocan
Representative of Wisconsin

153. Nellie Pou
Representative of New Jersey

154. Ayanna Pressley
Representative of Massachusetts

155. Mike Quigley
Representative of Illinois

156. Delia C. Ramirez
Representative of Illinois

157. Emily Randall
Representative of Washington

158. Josh Riley
Representative of New York

159. Luz M. Rivas
Representative of California

160. Deborah K. Ross
Representative of North Carolina

161. Raul Ruiz
Representative of California

162. Patrick K. Ryan
Representative of New York

163. Andrea Salinas
Representative of Oregon

164. Linda T. Sánchez
Representative of California

165. Mary Gay Scanlon
Representative of Pennsylvania

166. Jan Schakowsky
Representative of Illinois

167. Hillary J. Scholten
Representative of Michigan

168. Kim Schrier, M.D.
Representative of Washington

169. Robert C. “Bobby” Scott
Representative of Virginia

170. David Scott
Representative of Georgia

171. Terri A. Sewell
Representative of Alabama

172. Brad Sherman
Representative of California

173. Mikie Sherrill
Representative of New Jersey

174. Lateefah Simon
Representative of California

175. Adam Smith
Representative of Washington

176. Eric Sorensen
Representative of Illinois

177. Darren Soto
Representative of Florida

178. Melanie A. Stansbury
Representative of New Mexico

179. Greg Stanton
Representative of Arizona

180. Haley Stevens
Representative of Michigan

181. Marilyn Strickland
Representative of Washington

182. Suhas Subramanyam
Representative of Virginia

183. Thomas R. Suozzi
Representative of New York

184. Eric Swalwell
Representative of California

185. Emilia Strong Sykes
Representative of Ohio

186. Mark Takano
Representative of California

187. Shri Thanedar
Representative of Michigan

188. Mike Thompson
Representative of California

189. Dina Titus
Representative of Nevada

190. Rashida Tlaib
Representative of Michigan

191. Jill Tokuda
Representative of Hawaii

192. Paul D. Tonko
Representative of New York

193. Norma J. Torres
Representative of California

194. Ritchie Torres
Representative of New York

195. Lori Trahan
Representative of Massachusetts

196. Derek T. Tran
Representative of California

197. Lauren Underwood
Representative of Illinois

198. Juan Vargas
Representative of California

199. Gabe Vasquez
Representative of New Mexico

200. Marc Veasey
Representative of Texas

201. Nydia M. Velázquez
Representative of New York

202. Eugene Vindman
Representative of Virginia

203. Debbie Wasserman Schultz
Representative of Florida

204. Maxine Waters
Representative of California

205. Bonnie Watson Coleman
Representative of New Jersey

206. George T. Whitesides
Representative of California

207. Nikema Williams
Representative of Georgia

208. Frederica S. Wilson
Representative of Florida